

Black Moonlight (The Marjorie McClelland Mysteries Book 4)

A thoroughly enjoyable historical mystery that takes its audience dancing into a bygone era. Midwest Book Review Mystery writer Marjorie McClelland took the plunge and eloped with the very charming Creighton Ashcroft. Their new marriage and honeymoon are smooth sailing until the cruise ship they're on leaves Marjorie seasick. When the two debark and head to a private island owned by Creightons family, they come face-to-face with the shock of their lives: Creightons family is in residence. Worst among the brood is Creightons abrasive father, who insults everyone, including his own wife, his entire family and staff, and most of all Marjorie and Creighton. When the boorish and menacing old man is found dead, nobody sheds a tear, but all eyes turn to Creighton as the most likely suspect. With the members of the household the only people on the island, finding the real killer should be a fairly straightforward job, but as Marjorie digs deeper and uncovers multiple motives and family turmoil, she might find that while blood is thicker than water, it spills much more easily. About the Author: Amy Patricia Meade is the author of the critically acclaimed Marjorie McClelland Mystery series, the Pret Near Perfect mysteries, and the Rosie the Riveter mysteries. She is a member of Sisters in Crime and Mystery Writers of America. When not writing, Amy spends her time cooking, entertaining, watching classic films, wearing dangerously high heels, and shopping for vintage-style dresses.
