

Candida, a Mystery, Vol. 2 (Classic Reprint)

October morning in the north east quarter of London, a vast district miles away from the London of May fair and St James's, and much less narrow, squalid, fetid and airless in its slums. It is strong in unfashionable middle class life; wide-streets; myriad-populated; well served with ugly iron urinals, Radical clubs, and tram lines carrying a perpetual stream of yellow cars; enjoying in its main thoroughfares the luxury of grass-grown front gardens untrodden by the foot of man save as to the path from the gate to the hall door; blighted by a callously endured monotony of miles and miles of unlovely brick houses, black iron railings, stony pavements, slated roofs, and respectably ill dressed or disreputably poorly dressed people, quite accustomed to the place, and mostly plodding uninterestedly about somebody else's work. The little energy and eagerness that crop up shew themselves in cockney cupidity and business push. Even the policemen and the chapels are not infrequent enough to break the mono-tony. The sun is shining cheerfully; there is no fog; and though the smoke effectually prevents anything, whether faces and hands or bricks and mortar, from looking fresh and clean, it is not hanging heavily enough to trouble a Londoner. This desert of unattractiveness has its oasis. (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and do not occur in the book.)
