

Chicks in Chainmail

Introducing today's Warrior Woman: she's strong, she's capable, she's independent and she's serious. But most of all, as portrayed in the 20 stories collected here, she's absolutely unforgettable, whether dressed in a chic designer suit or the traditional chainmail bikini. From Jan Stirling comes Were-Wench, about a bold and brave swordswoman who's cursed to transmogrify into a wanton hussy whenever the moon is full. David Vierling offers Armor / Amour, about what happens after the sun-bronzed warrior hunk rescues the beautiful damsel from considerable distress. Susan Schwartz spins a sharp contemporary tale called Exchange Program, in which Hillary Rodham Clinton - victim of an Amtrak accident - finds herself in Valhalla, where she takes the Valkyries under her wing (and puts both Odin and his boorish son Thor in their places). And what would a Warrior Woman anthology be without George Alec Effinger's totally terrific Barbarian Swordsperson, Maureen Muffy Birnbaum? This time she's Muffy in the MUD (no, not mud, MUS, or Multi-User Dungeon), fighting her way through a computer role-playing game in the company of a supernatural personage of ancient power and wisdom who looks just like (this is going to sound omigod weird) Brad Pitt. Also included, works by Lawrence Watt-Evans, Roger Zelazny, Eluki Bed Shahar, Jody Lynn Nye and other ingenious writers.
