

The Great Secret

I laid my papers down upon the broad mahogany counter, and exchanged greetings with the tall frock-coated reception clerk who came smiling towards me. I should like a single room on the third floor east, about the middle corridor, I said. Can you manage that for me? 317 I had last time. He shook his head at once. I am very sorry, Mr. Courage, he said, but all the rooms in that corridor are engaged. We will give you one on the second floor at the same price. I was about to close with his offer, when, with a word of excuse, he hurried away to intercept some one who was passing through the hall. A junior clerk took his place, and consulted the plan for a moment doubtfully.
