

The British Quarterly Review, Vol. 83: January, 1886 (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The British Quarterly Review, Vol. 83: January, 1886 The Church, the State, and the relations between them, are subjects which, in the region of speculation, might give rise to endless controversies. It must, therefore, be some advantage to be able to look at them in the light of facts and history. The Report of the Ecclesiastical Courts Commission, with the evidence brought before the Commissioners, will greatly help in this direction, though it is marvellous how many things of supreme importance to the inquiry have been. Passed over. We can set aside the special theories of the different witnesses, look only at their statements, compare them with each other, and test them by what is really known. It may be said on the strength of the evidence that there is a general agreement among all parties that, whatever else the Reformation did, it gave to the sovereign that supremacy over the Church which was previously held by the Bishop of Rome. In the time of King Henry it was called the headship. But the nature of that headship, as exercised by the Pope, and when vested in the civil ruler, may not be exactly the same. A bishop is a church officer, but whether or not the position of a Christian sovereign in the Church differs from that of any other layman, is a question on which opinions differ.
