

Making Love in Madrid: A Novella (Conversation Pieces, Volume 17)

...Even as she talks, she is assessing his lack of composure, his evident ineffectualness in his slouch and dumbfounded expression. You see my dilemma. I find myself without a history, and I need someone to fill it in for me. Additionally, I will need some kind of personal quirk, because such things make for convincing fictions. She pauses, and adds philosophically, If the world really were populated by fictional characters we would none of us understand each other for our compelling eccentricities. (from Making Love in Madrid With Making Love in Madrid, Kimberly Todd Wade makes her fictional debut. Anna Tambour, author of The Spotted Lily and Monterras Deliciosa and Other Tales, describes the novella as a fantasia of amnesia, of lives that need filling, of writers of every tense, of talent and dry lemons and melted cheese; of giggling and tangled sheets and denture adhesive, competition and tenderness, a bloodless bullfight, the power of a giant smile to diminish greatness--a modern mannerist story around a story.
