

Rotten Reviews Redux: A Literary Companion

The revival of a nasty bestseller! A quarter century ago Pushcart Press took aim at ridiculous reviews that had trashed literary masterpieces through the centuries. Over 175 attacks were quoted in a little book that itself became a best-selling classic. Today much has changed. The rise of digital self-publishing has fired up hundreds of critical blogs. As the cliché has it everybody is a critic and they're often anonymous and far from nice. This collection, with a new introduction, by Pushcart editor Bill Henderson includes gems like: The final blow-up of what was once a remarkable, if minor, talent. (The New Yorker, 1936, on William Faulkner's Absalom, Absalom!) Diffuse-brackish-pretentious. (Virginia Wolfe, 1922, on James Joyce's Ulysses) Whitman is as unacquainted with art as a hog is with mathematics. (The London Critic, 1855, on Walt Whitman's Leaves of Grass) It gasps for want of craft and sensibility. (New York Times Book Review, 1961, on Joseph Heller's Catch-22)
