

Space Gravy (Episode 1 - 3012)

In my experience, when a man stares out of the window of a spaceship at a gas planet while listening to an Elton John ballad, there's usually a woman behind it. Steve Murphy has been to the future. The year 3012, to be precise: he knows what it's like. Space Gravy is a story set in that future. A normal chap sent on a mysterious mission by a shady organisation, Steve finds himself on a chaotic journey across a solar system long-ago colonised by the human race, in pursuit of a beautiful woman accompanied only by a Norwegian idiot. Steve is quickly faced with some pretty serious questions... Like why am I writing this in the third person, when I am Steve Murphy? Space Gravy is NOT a NOVEL. Space Gravy is a prose soap-opera, or PROAP. You may not have heard of such a thing, but I can assure you they are all the rage in 3012 as is the music of Elton John. Lord Elton really has stood the test of time you know. Mozart, however, is something of a musical footnote, much like Chris De Burg is today. There are many more details like these in Space Gravy. You may well read them all and conclude that I haven't in fact been to the year 3012; that I'm deluded, that I was hallucinating, or pissed, or that I'm simply making it all up, but I can assure you it's all true. I'm not like those boys from the band Busted they really were charlatans. 3012 - the first episode in Space Gravy, a proap by Steve Murphy. Circa 4000 words. Look out for episode 2, Ringo and Elton.
